

Dear Resident,

You have all probably seen the news stories about the flu-like Coronavirus. While not prevalent in the United States, coronavirus has been detected in thousands of people worldwide, primarily in China. This strain has not been previously found in humans.

The Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) is monitoring the outbreak closely and working with state and local health partners and officials to prepare, screen, and prevent the spread of illness.

As with any communicable disease, a few prevention steps can protect you. While we see flu season come and go every year, we thought a few reminders would be helpful:

- Wash hands for 20 seconds or more with soapy water.
- Avoid sharing anything that has come in contact with saliva.
- Cough and sneeze into a tissue or your elbow.
- Encourage others to stay in their room if they are feeling sick.
- Get adequate sleep and eat well to ensure a healthy immune system.

Your community team is committed to following specific procedures and precautions to provide a healthy environment for everyone. If you find that you're feeling unwell, whether it be muscle aches, fever, or anything in between, please let us know. Working together, we can keep everyone healthy this flu season.
